

The process of Prexury's elaboration consists of the following steps:

Prexury slabs are handcrafted. The semi-precious stones are extracted, selected for their size and quality and prepared for the cutting process.

The pieces are then selected and specially cut in sizes suited to highlight the beauty and quality of each stone. Once they've been cut and polished, the pieces are selected and classified by size.

The next step involves the arrangement of the pieces. This process is completely handcrafted; that is, the pieces are arranged manually. The idea is to maximise the space and to create only the smallest of gaps between stones which will later be filled by resin and fused together. Expert artisans fill in the remaining spaces with semi-precious stones of smaller sizes in order to ensure that the resulting gap is as small as possible.

Once this painstaking work in arranging and filling is complete, the slab undergoes quality control processes that ensure homogeneity, mineral grade and slab design. The slab is then taken to the firing, calibration and cutting area where the final slab dimensions are obtained.

Once they are polished, they are passed on to quality control where the semi-precious stones are examined once more, as is the final design and quality of the slabs.